

„The one Edward Wojciechowski”
by one Emilia Chromy

As I left my superior's office i flipped the pages of the file for my most newly aquiered patient. One Edward Wojciechowski a case of hallucinatory terrors and queer dreams of deamonic entities. As stated in the paper a sufferer of shitzophrenic tendencies. He was informed of the newest changes that had to be done, a change in the doctor. And although not welcomed by him, it truthfully was a most needed of changes, the fraud of a doctor assinged to him shouldn't have stayed in the fine institute of my workplace for as long as he did, the patient was of course informed of the actions that led to such position. His most trusted of doctors seemed to steal medication for intoxication of his own mind. Most unprofessional and distasteful of actions.

The thoughts of my introduction flew inside of my head as i reached for the key to open the door that trapped the man inside. It soon was opened. There he stood in a corner looking up almost as if he was admiring an unseed being. As i went to speak he interrupted asking to describe the being he saw in the corner., I only said that i don't see that which he sees. He understood, looking away with a frown. As he came to face me he seemed almost angered by my being, I must admit his deformed facial structure unsetteled me as it scanned my posture. He seemed like he wanted to protest, but with no one to submit him under proper treatment, he would have no chioce. His hand soon reached out and i came to shake it fimly. He invited me to sit by him and talk on his matress. And with that being exactly what i came to do, i sat and listened to his tale. He began to tell me the story of how it all started.

He was a young chap in his fine days, a librarian he added. Deformed in image but with a great heart in his chest. One evening there came a cloaked man, he himself was at the back at the time. The men left a book upon the counter and quickly left. So there stood he looking at the book that seemed to appear out of nowhere. He acquired it and looked through the pages to check its state, it was fine not teared or damaged, taking a glance at the cover he discovered for it to not be registered in the library, it seemed to be almost ancient a scripture of some religious source. He took it to his place of stay a apartment in a poor part of London. He spent the night studying its contents and as he grew tired he fell asleep on the desk where it laid. A strange dream occurred this night he said. It was of a dark void he floated through, a cosmic nothingness far beyond the edges of the universe. He heard a voice and not understanding it at first as he said almost an incomprehensible clicking it was, he began to hear English like wording until he fully understood it, he did not tell me what it said to him that night, but he did add this. He took to look behind of himself and described to me a bug like creature to be floating behind of him of pinkish and white colors, a mixture of mantis or beetle or even wasp. „Rosé” he said in a loving voice. That was her name. After the night he began to feel like something was peaking at him from corners. Like there were bugs crawling on him as he tried to rest. And every night from then she would visit his dreams. He said he was not afraid, that it was almost peaceful to him to talk to her. And then at nights further more he began to sleepwalk at first awaking at his couch or by his bed on the floor. But afterwards he began to wake in an almost shocked state. Upon his desk. He was fine with the sensation. Until he began to see papers with weird images or writings in a strange tongue. From then he began to feel more paranoid. He would freak out at the sight of insects his friends blamed it on a new phobia but he believed better. As more nights appeared the book he brought would show in different places. Freaking him out at most of times. In the morning he would smell formic acid from bodies of water or appliances. Then further more he began to see her image in his vision she would hide among people. He went to a therapist after a night where he awoke standing before a tied noose standing on a chair. That night he gathered the papers that were made by his hand and burned them to ash as well as the book. His therapist called upon our service and we were sent to take him in.

he told me that he still sees insects around as well as her image he told me as quoted

„i know it may seem strange but she yearns to speak. The medication seems to lessen her connection. But i know what will return it” he added „the book was destroyed but as i was taken in i saw it, they had it, i know it’s here with me, and that i cannot take, but for my state there is only one lonesome cure. I think i finally accept it. Rosé she is waiting”. I left him at that.

The next day i had returned it seems he was gone from his containment. I hastened to my superior he informed me that Edward had smashed his brains upon the bar of his own bed that night. There was no way to save him as there was no more of one Edward Wojciechowski when the doctors came.

I came to the library and asked of the book it was handed to me.

there was a fire set that very night.

Rest your soul as you are once more with your beloved now.
